The present invention relates to an apparatus for dispensing liquid products, comprising a storage container for the product, a closure cap for the storage container and a product dispensing unit, which is mechanically coupled to the closure cap and connected to a product dispensing conduit of the storage container. The invention relates more particularly to such apparatus for dispensing liquid products, such as alcohol-based products, comprising a closure cap which can be rotated in a first direction in order to actuate a pump for dispensing product through the product dispensing conduit, and in a second direction for actuating a mixing device which ensures that the product remaining in the product dispensing conduit is mixed with water when the apparatus is used for drinking. Such apparatus is described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,635,928, which comprises an electrically powered drive unit, such as a motor, and a gearing unit. The drive unit is connected to a rotary disk, which is fixed to the closure cap, by means of a lever which connects the rotary disk to the drive unit and which is pivotable about a fixed axis by a switch actuated by the closure cap. The gearing unit is also fixed to the closure cap. It comprises an endless toothed belt which is also connected to the rotary disk and which is rotatably coupled to a rotary shaft that is connected to the drive unit. In this manner the closure cap can be rotated by the drive unit in a first direction in order to actuate the pump for dispensing product, and it can also be rotated in a second direction in order to actuate the mixing device, as described above.
